Grounds for reporting hate

Summary

In this monitoring period, partners reported a growing discrepancy between a regular and trusted flagger user status. Platforms tend to ignore or not remove content when reported as a regular user. The other worrying trend is the increased non-responsiveness of the platforms. Even when reporting violent threats, the platforms manage not to react or remove the content. The third trend is the increased demands that platforms put on users during the reporting process. We have encountered changing forms, unclear requirements, bad translations into national languages and, most worrisome, demand for the private data of the users, which might jeopardize their privacy and safety. The SafeNet partners repeatedly warned about the lack of contact person(s) for individual platforms.
